CUPCAKE SURPRISE

LARRY'S CUPCAKE CAFÉ BRINGS WORLD-CLASS CUPCAKES TO EUGENE BY WILLIAM KENNEDY

“We take the notion of a cupcake and elevate it to the next level,” says Larry Oswald, owner, founder, baker (and moppper, he adds) at Larry’s Cupcake Café — a new addition to downtown Eugene’s food-scene renaissance.

Larry’s recently opened in Eugene after nine years in Ashland, moving to be closer to grandkids in Seattle and to escape Ashland’s feast-or-famine tourist cycle. Ashland is the Oregon Shakespeare Festival’s town and Larry’s needed to be where there are more people, Oswald explains.

After looking for space in Eugene and Portland, Oswald and his wife settled on West Park Street in the heart of downtown, near Voodoo Donuts. The space is “right in the hub of it,” Oswald says, “it’s a nice match.”

Larry’s boasts “The World’s Largest Selection of Surprise Cupcakes.” A surprise cupcake is what it sounds like: a cupcake with a surprise filling. While he’s not the first to bake them, Oswald says surprise cupcakes are his niche — he makes them with a “proprietary” technique.

Based on customer feedback, Oswald feels his product rivals that of cupcakeries in New York and Chicago. Some unique flavors on Larry’s menu are Kahlua mudslide, pink champagne and beer nuts — made with the real deal in the recipe: Kahlua, champagne and Ninkasi’s Tricerahops beer.

The alcohol is not cooked out like in other recipes, Oswald says. But don’t worry, you’d have to eat 100 to really feel it, he jokes.

Salted caramel swirl is Larry’s best-selling flavor. The chocolate cupcake is multilayered and filled with a caramel-flavored whipped crème. Oswald describes the look on people’s faces when they taste whipped crème made with real ingredients: A salted caramel swirl and chocolate ganache tops the treat, creating complex flavors and a decadent mix of firmness, lightness and density, all in one bite.

Along with 50 different flavors of surprise cupcakes, Larry’s offers vegan, gluten-free and novelty designs like Duck-themed cupcakes (of course), or personal photos and business logos added for weddings, special events and corporate functions.

New to town, Oswald is learning many of Eugene’s traditions — the Slug Queen inspired him to conceive of a tie-in cupcake. “Banana slug?” he ponders, and the creative process begins. ■

Larry’s Cupcake Café is open 10 am to 6 pm Monday through Saturday at 868 W. Park St., 505-9317, www.larryscupcakecafe.com

PORTABLE FOR THE PALATE

GASTRONOMAD DEFIES GENRE WORDS BY SHANNON FINNELL • PHOTOS BY TRASK BEDORTHA

Some food carts create a specific type of cuisine: Mexican, pizza, Southern food, vegetarian. GastroNomad owner Ben Maude reinvents his menu on the regular not by picking a genre, but by running his food truck as some sort of delicious pop quiz.

Maude says that his ground rule for making his menu is finding the best fresh and local ingredients that he can. Then it's creativity time. "I take the ingredients that I find, and I take the flavors that I want to cook with that day or that week," he says, "and I turn them into what I think is going to be the best dish."

GastroNomad's third requirement is more practical than tasty: Maude prefers to make street food that's easy to eat on the go, if necessary. "That's really the thought, to not have to necessarily use a fork and knife but be able to hold your food, take it on the go," he says.

This portability principle led Maude to his current taco kick. "It's very easy to place food in a tortilla and have it be easy to eat," he says. "Now, that doesn't mean that it's Mexican food! It just means that it's in a tortilla."

When Maude says that tacos aren't necessarily Mexican, he's talking about dishes like the seared scallop taco with strawberry and basil "salsa," which consists of strawberries, a little bit of olive oil, a touch of lemon juice, finely minced red onions and fresh basil cut to order and placed over the top. "It's an interesting taco," he says, "it's not something you're used to tasting between a tortilla."

Thus far, GastroNomad's pork belly tacos are its biggest hit. "I probably sell three pork belly tacos to any one of anything else," Maude says. It's not just that pork belly is trendy right now, though. "It's rich and easy to cook and inexpensive, so you can have something that's really spectacular without having to pay an arm and a leg for it."

For much less than the price of human limbs, customers can grab the tacos made of pork belly confit marinated in a rub of paprika, garlic, olive oil, cinnamon, chili powder, cumin and coriander. Maude says he renders off the fat, and he compares the process to a slow poach in its own oil. "It's very rich." He also adds jicama and cabbage slaw that's been quick-pickled in salt and lime juice, plus roasted pasilla pepper sauce and cilantro-lime yogurt.

GASTRONOMAD
OWNER BEN MAUDE

GastroNomad always has a vegetarian option, which is often vegan. Right now, Maude invites customers to order the pork belly taco vegetarian, which uses the same marinade used on the pork but puréed with soy curls. "You get the general flavors of the sauce without the pork," and the rest of the taco is the same as the pork belly option.

Right now, the vegan option is soy curls with ginger hoisin, marinated together and sautéed with pickled carrot and cucumber. "I wasn't sure if people were going to be ready for an Asian vegan taco!" Maude says.

"I'm using pretty much everything that I can get that's local and organic," Maude says. "For the yogurt I use Nancy's, pork from Carlton Farms, tortillas made fresh at Plaza Latina and Don Froylan Queso Fresco," which is made in Albany. When he can't find a local product he needs, he usually looks to small markets like Capella that favor organic ingredients.

GastroNomad operates out of the vintage VW van that used to house Devour. However, that wasn't Maude's original plan. Within three days of bringing his first food cart home, the 400-pound cart was stolen from his yard. "It threw me for a loop, but at the same time it sort of lit a fire and sent me on a path toward looking for something else, looking for something new," he says.

Maude discovered the VW on Craigslist, and the day he purchased it, the police located his cart miles from his home. "It's sort of funny how things end up working out for the better," he says. "It was a blessing in disguise."

It's not just the VW van that Maude gained while his cart was stolen. He says the community at large made him feel welcome and supported, and the food cart community especially stepped up: In particular, Ume Grill offered to let him use a spare cart "for the sake of being nice," and Garbanzo Grill gave him the "no-BS story" on how to run a food cart.

True to its name, GastroNomad moves around a lot, but Maude is regularly with Garbanzo Grill and the Sandwich League in a lot at 3rd and Van Buren. He announces his location and current menu every day on Facebook. ■

DALIA ON BROADWAY

LITTLE SISTER DO WHAT YOUR BIG SISTER DONE BY SHANNON FINNELL

For a third of a century, Ibrahim Hamide worked around the challenge of running his first restaurant, Casablanca, out of a small location at Fifth Street Public Market. “It proved to me that people really like [Lebanese] food and maybe even the way I presented it and prepared it, but the space was too small, so it didn’t offer me the full range of what I wanted to do, food-wise and service-wise,” he says.

Hamide decided to solve that problem by solving another: The business model for Café Zenon, an upscale restaurant he purchased in 2009, wasn’t working out in the changing economy, so he decided to close Zenon and move in. Thus Dalia on Broadway — named for his younger daughter, as Café Soriah was named for his oldest daughter — was born.

Like Casablanca, Dalia has Lebanese fare, but solving the spatial issues allowed Hamide to expand the old menu and left him with wiggle room for creativity, as well.

“The luxury! It’s like if a painter was painting from his or her desk and suddenly they get invited to a studio,” he says. “Just having the tools that you didn’t have before is amazing for cooking.”

Hamide says it’s hard to pick a standout item at Dalia because the food of the Fertile Crescent caters to a lot of different tastes, but the lamb and chicken shawarmas have already been selling well. “Shawarma is a traditional dish, and it’s a spice and a marinade that flavors lamb and chicken,” he says. “Of course the old standbys of hummus and baba ganoush and tabbouleh are pretty standard for Lebanese fare, and they’re really popular.”

Dalia is an ideal restaurant for mixed parties of vegetarians and meat enthusiasts, Hamide says, because everyone has enough to choose from. “It’s really heaven for a lot of vegetarians because there’s so much that’s vegetarian, but there are also strong features of lamb and chicken.”

Hamide says that Dalia’s interior doesn’t look like the old Zenon. A remodel divided the large dining area and added curtains, sound mufflers on the ceilings and some banquet seating. “The noise factor that was sometimes mentioned has been totally dealt with,” he says.

“The place looks inviting and clean and modern and welcoming and hospitable and all the stuff that I was hoping, while remodeling, that it would accomplish.” ■

ALL DOUGHNUTS, ALL THE TIME

DAYNIGHT DONUTS CAN BRING YOUR DOUGHNUT IDEA TO LIFE

WORDS BY BRIAN PALMER • PHOTOS BY TODD COOPER

A doughnut is a doughnut is a doughnut, right? Wrong. One of the first things you need to know about Joseph Mungra, the owner of Daynight Donuts on River Road and Highway 99, is that he is not interested in making donuts the same way a lot of places do.

"We take pride in making our doughnuts by hand," Mungra says. "We don't use machines to make the doughnuts. That makes a big difference. Doughnuts end up having a different taste when you cut them with a machine; you lose some taste, so I never use those. Making them by hand takes longer and it's labor-intensive, but in the end, the doughnuts are tastier."

Daynight Donuts is a locally owned and operated business, with two stores in Salem and a second store in Eugene, but Mungra and his family do more than sell doughnuts and frozen yogurt at their River Road store. They want to create an unparalleled dining experience for their customers, so they go out of their way to meet the customers' needs.

"We cook whatever the customer wants," Mungra says. "If they come in and say, 'I want to have a maple bar filled,' then we'll put in the fruit or custard filling or whatever they want. We tailor our products based on the customer's needs." And sometimes they just want one of the best-sellers: apple fritter, apple crumb, Bavarian cream and coconut cream.

Mungra recently returned from India, where he directed a documentary about the health and environmental hazards illegal mining poses because he wants to educate people so they won't drink contaminated water and become severely ill. Similarly, he wants to help meet the needs of people here in Eugene, even if they aren't his customers.

"We don't ever sell anything that is stale," Mungra says. "At the end of the night, whatever leftover products we have we donate to the Eugene Mission."

Making tasty food, not taking shortcuts and helping others in need? Now that sounds like a winning combination. ■

Daynight Donuts is open 5 am to 1 am Monday through Sunday at 1060 River Road and open 24 hours at 520 Hwy. 99, www.daynightdonuts.com

RED WAGON CREAMERY'S EMILY AND STUART PHILLIPS WITH PARTY CART'S MARK KOSMICKI AND TIFFANY NORTON IN THEIR NEW DOWNTOWN LOCATION

A PALATABLE PARTNERSHIP

PARTY CART AND RED WAGON CREAMERY JOIN FORCES DOWNTOWN

WORDS BY ALEX NOTMAN • PHOTOS BY TODD COOPER

The last time EW caught up with the dynamic duos behind Party Cart (Tiffany Norton and Mark Kosmicki) and Red Wagon Creamery (Emily and Stuart Phillips) in fall 2012, they were cultivating a culinary following at the corner of 28th and Friendly, serving savory seasonal plates and ambrosial scoops of ice cream respectively. At that point, there were only murmurs of a brick-and-mortar establishment; it was more of a long-term dream than a short-term reality. What a difference two seasons make; after unexpected growth in their businesses, a Party Cart and Red Wagon Creamery joint restaurant-bar and ice cream parlor venture will open in early May.

"We really couldn't do it without each other," Norton says. The Phillips would often eat at Party Cart with their creamery wagon in tow, heading straight there from the Lane County Farmers Market. It wasn't long before Norton and Kosmicki encouraged them to share the lot.

"It made us realize that we get along personally," Stuart says, "and also our businesses were very symbiotic and not just in the type of food that we did, but the way that we approach food: local, fresh, seasonal with a spin."

With the help of the Downtown Revitalization Loan Program, NEDCO and Community LendingWorks, the quartet will be opening a full-blown gastronomic hotspot downtown in the renovated 3,400-square-foot space that once housed Club Snafu. (But don't fret foodies! The carts will remain open as well.)

The restaurant and bar, Party Downtown, will be nestled on the lot's northern end with Mediterranean blue-stained concrete floors, scones sculpted by local artist Jessie Rose Vala and an open kitchen where partiers can "watch the magic." That magic includes what Kosmicki calls a "hyperseasonal, hyperlocal" menu with Party Cart favorites like mini pies and tiny biscuits with bacon honey butter, and new items like goat T-bones and whole smoked chickens. Daytime will be counter service (there is a six-foot deli case with grab-and-go options) and nighttime will be full service; brunch will be served on weekends.

"We still want to be casual and fun and serve really high quality food in a non-snobby environment," Kosmicki says. Which is why, Norton points out, menu items will range from $3 to $17.

"We're going for smaller portions for a lesser price so you can try multiple things," she says. Party Downtown's bar will be helmed by "bar chef" James West (of Marché fame), with Oregon-centric spirits and beers — there will always be an Agrarian brew on tap.

Pass the bar, shared lounge and penny-tiled bathrooms and enter ice cream nirvana: the Red Wagon Creamery ice cream parlor that will overlook Broadway. Stuart describes the vibe as "upscale San Francisco bakery," with cherry-stained oak floors, wooden tables (crafted by Emily's stepdad Elisa Ruiz) and a window open to the churning room.

PARTY CART'S APPLE PIE PAIRED WITH RED WAGON CREAMERY'S NOT-SO-PLAIN-JANE VANILLA ICE CREAM

Emily says the larger space and the addition of a pasteurizer will allow for more experimental flavors, like "Russian meteorite" (vodka roasted-beet ice cream with a fudge-sauce swirl and chocolate malt balls), wholesaling their ice cream and other confections (all made in-house) best kept from your dentist: sundaes with caramelized bananas and homemade marshmallow topping, sesame and chocolate cones, seasonal mini-baked Alaskas, baked goods and candies, old-timey soda fountain drinks.

"I love a nice spicy root beer," Stuart says with a sly grin. "I've been developing a recipe of my own." And for the after dark crowd, look for ice cream cocktails (e.g. a frozen mimosa mixed with orange sorbet and sparkling wine) as well as "poptails" (alcoholic popsicles).

But perhaps the most exciting of all for the flavor-hound will be the crossover, like when Kosmicki prepares pancetta for the "Fig and Pig" ice cream or the Phillips craft a dessert cheese plate for Party Downtown with three different cheese ice creams.

Eugene, this is the beginning of a beautiful, and highly scrumptious, friendship. ■

Party Downtown and Red Wagon Creamery's ice cream parlor will open in early May at 55 W. Broadway.

FISH, FISH, DOG!

WILD GRILL FOODS MAKES HOT DOGS FROM SALMON BY SHANNON FINNELL

Sometimes a hot dog is just a hot dog, but sometimes it's made of fish. Wild Grill Foods, a Eugene-based company specializing in seafood products, is now distributing its salmon dogs in local stores.

Patrick Sullivan says his company began with the philosophy that some people got intimidated because they just didn't know how to cook fish, and by making fish products in a "familiar form" such as burgers, more people would feel capable of cooking it. He says this healthier protein philosophy doesn't end with form; they strive to keep products low in sodium and calories.

Sullivan says Wild Grill has been kicking around the idea for salmon hot dogs for years, but it was only recently that the different grinding and casing processes fell into place. "It took us four years to get the casing," which is a gel made of brown seaweed from the coastal waters off Norway, he says. "Even though it's made from seaweed, it's clear, odorless and tasteless." He says one of the reasons Wild Grill settled on the method is that it doesn't use collagen, an animal protein he describes as an "environmental disaster."

Finally, the fish: The salmon are from Alaska, plus some farm-raised Atlantic salmon. "For 20 years we stayed away from farmed fish," he says, but adds that these days, it's possible to find a much better product.

The salmon dogs come in different flavor profiles such as jalapeño and Napa. And salmon isn't the only type of fish that Wild Grill is turning oblong; they also make a chorizo product from catfish. "Pork and catfish are both a little greasy," Sullivan says, and that made catfish a good texture and flavor for chorizo. ■

Wild Grill products can be found in most local natural foods stores, including Market of Choice and Kiva.

'It took us four years to get the casing. Even though it's made from seaweed, it's clear, odorless and tasteless.'

DUKKO'S DOES IT GOOD

FIFTH STREET MARKET EATERY FILLS STOMACHS, HEARTS AND MINDS WORDS BY VANESSA SALVIA • PHOTOS BY TRASK BEDORTHA

Cheri Esselstrom, owner of the new Dukko's eatery in the Fifth Street Public Market's International Food Court, knows a bit about hard times, perseverance, community and family. Oh, and food. She and her husband, Duck alumnus and football player Matthew Esselstrom, own a 40-acre farm on the Entiat River in central Washington, where they lived until his job transferred them here. At the farm they grow an abundance of orchard fruits and vegetables, putting up enough for their own family (six kids and eight grandchildren between them), supplying a restaurant called Casa Grande that Esselstrom owns and leases, selling at farmers markets in the area and donating to a food shelter.

DUKKO'S OWNER
CHERI ESSELSTROM

Esselstrom is originally from New Orleans, and lived there until her first husband passed away. She has managed wineries in the Lake Chelan, Wash., area and has a catering license, providing farm-to-table meals. She's also traveled the world, including several trips to Italy.

And Esselstrom's a do-er. She's a fast talker, but never with an air of impatience, it's just that she doesn't like to be idle. "I moved here without knowing anyone," she says. "Without my grandkids or kids here, I had a lot of free time." She wanted her own restaurant, because she wanted to be able to be creative and add her personal touch to the menu. She began looking at restaurants that were for sale, and settled on the former Noli Italian restaurant. Esselstrom began providing Italian food similar to what Noli offered, but with an expanded menu led by customer demand.

Dukko's had been open for six weeks last November when Esselstrom's daughter in Washington died in a car accident caused by someone who was texting and driving. "I had been working 105 hours a week here," she says. "And then all of a sudden I just wasn't here anymore." That was a setback, but now, she says, "things are going along as they should be."

Ms. Cheri, as her employees know her, makes almost everything herself, save the bread from Provisions and the fresh pasta from Pasta Plus. "I just can't buy anything processed," she says. "We have such a wonderful variety of food here. I want to cook what's fresh, what's in season, from local people in the farmers market." Her menu includes fresh sauces, meatballs, soups, salads and dressings made from scratch. Parents like that Dukko's offers a kids' menu, featuring buttery noodles made with fresh cheese and cream, Nutella and jam sandwiches or pasta with one meatball. Lighter fare will follow in the summertime, as well as later hours. "We are talking with the Market as a whole about staying open later so we can have more of a dinner crowd," Esselstrom says. "They're open to it."

Esselstrom, 57, grew up in foster homes, and her husband was formerly a high school teacher. "We've both mentored kids our whole lives," she says. Their restaurant is an extension of that philosophy. They pay their employees a higher-than-usual starting wage. "We hope this is a stepping-off place," she explains. "We want every single person to go on to bigger and better things. We give them an opportunity and tell them they can go on to do anything they want."

Dukko's has been well-received, she says, enjoying many repeat customers. By all accounts, they come for the Southern-style camaraderie as well as the good food. Every day Esselstrom gives a meal away, at random. "It's my way of giving back," she says. "We don't have the same community here with family that we had in Washington, but we're trying to make our own community."

Part of the appeal of the food court for Esselstrom was that it allows people to come together. "It's open seating so someone who eats from Cafe Glendi may sit right here," she says, gesturing to her bar. "There's so much variety of food here that someone can get something at one place and their friend can get something from a different place and they're both happy. It's a shared experience. I'm really happy that we chose this place." ■

Dukko's Eatery is open 11 am to 7 pm Monday through Friday, 9 am to 7 pm Saturday, 9 am to 5 pm Sunday at 296 E. 5th Ave, Suite 201, Fifth Street Public Market, 743-0862.

TAVERN SANDWICH

FROM THE BARN LIGHT

"It's our most unique dish," says Chef Eric Keskeys about why he chose to share the recipe for this sandwich. "It's a Midwestern sandwich that's pretty specific to Indiana." What's it doing on a menu in Eugene? The Barn Light's owners strive to take classic American regional food and make it their own, for a Northwest palate. Co-owner Dustin Kinsey is from Arkansas, and honors that heritage with an Arkansas hot brown. Sometimes called the Kentucky hot brown, it's chicken and gravy stacked with coffee-glazed bacon, tomato and cheddar on toast. Other regional favorites include an Astoria-inspired tuna salad, Kansas-style meatloaf sandwich, and The Barn Light BS — inspired by a Wisconsin sandwich of coffee-glazed bacon and slaw.

Keskeys says he found out about the original dish from an episode of Roseanne, where Roseanne Arnold serves "loosemeat" sandwiches. "It's like a Sloppy Jerry but without the tomato sauce," Keskeys says. The Barn Light serves "sensible portions," he explains. "So that you can soak up drinks as opposed to sitting down to have a drink and getting filled up, then going out to dinner."

1 lb ground beef
1 yellow onion, diced
1 stick butter
1 to 2 cup flour
1/4 cup red wine
21.5 oz beef stock, or 2 cans
1 tbsp yellow mustard
1 tsp salt
1 tsp pepper

In a frying pan, sauté onions until tender. Add ground beef and cook over medium heat until brown. Drain off liquid and return the beef to the pan.

In a saucepan, melt butter over medium heat. Add flour 1/4 cup at a time, whisking as you go, resulting with a thick roux.

Whisk in beef stock, adding red wine, mustard and spices once a smooth gravy forms.

Pour gravy mixture into the cooked ground beef and stir. Add water if necessary to desired consistency.

Add salt and pepper as needed.

Serve on soft rolls with pickles and mustard and grab a fork. — Vanessa Salvia

ICED MUSTARD SALAD

FROM NOODLE BOWL

EW readers might have voted Noodle Bowl Eugene's best Korean food because of its noodle dishes (or the soups, or the meats, or the bi bim bop alone), but Jae Lee, son of Noodle Bowl owner Soo Lee, says there's nothing like a Korean salad to enjoy in the warming weather. Korean food is "thick with flavor," Lee says, but the student-friendly restaurant sees a lot of people trying it for the first time because there are "not that many Korean restaurants out here."

The recipe is adaptable to different lettuces and dressings, Lee says. "You can use any dressing — balsamic or Italian, anything will work," he says. "But because a little sourness goes well during summertime, spicy mustard used in Asian cooking is really good." It's also adaptable to pork being used in other dishes. Lee suggests cooking as much pork as you like and using some for the salad.

DRESSING:

1/2 cup rice vinegar
1/2 cup sugar
1 tbsp salt
1/2 lemon, juiced
1 tbsp powdered hot mustard (from Asian food aisle or specialty store)
1/4 cup warm water

SALAD:

pork
1/2 small head iceberg lettuce
1/4 small onion
1 small carrot, grated
garlic and ginger (optional, to taste)
2 tsp roasted sesame seeds

To a pot of boiling water, add chopped garlic and ginger to suit your taste. (It helps diminish the pork odor and adds more flavors.) Boil pork between 45 minutes and an hour; slice thin.

Meanwhile, combine rice vinegar, sugar, salt and lemon juice and set aside. Separately, stir hot mustard powder into the warm water and allow it to sit for one minute, then combine the two mixtures.

Plate the slices of pork around the edge of the dish and add the torn lettuce to the center. Pour the dressing over the salad and meat, and top with roasted sesame seeds. Lee also suggests adding your favorite topping such as the shrimp shown below.

GLUTEN-FREE APPLE CAKE

FROM 'SWINE

'S Wonderful. 'S Marvelous. 'sWine. The Gershwin song "'S Wonderful" inspired the name of Monika McEachern's German wine shop and eatery, tucked away in a Pleasant Hill shopping center. Plus, she says, "If you say "it's wine" enough times it comes out like 'swine.' And I have a soft spot for pigs, so it works out." And her shop, open two years now, is wonderful and marvelous.

McEachern stocks a small but very good selection of German wine from the Pfalz region in the southwest, and bottled German beer, and provides a light menu of soups, salads, sandwiches, house-baked bread and cheese plates. Her soups tend to be creative but delicious. "I make soup everyday," she says, "so I want to make something that's interesting to me." German wines are naturally low in sulfites, so they don't leave drinkers with that hung-over feeling as much as other wines do. German wines are also fruitier than American wines, so they tend to seem sweeter, and many of them are on the lighter side — perfect for summer quaffing.

McEachern and her distribution partner travel to Germany to handpick the wines they import. She always has a couple of bottles (both red and white) open for tasting, but will happily open a bottle for people to try, and will provide samples of the soups, too. 'sWine is closed Sunday and Monday, and open late Fridays and Saturdays for live music.

3/4 cup sorghum flour
3/4 cup almond flour
1/4 cup rice flour
1/4 cup tapioca flour
1 tbsp xanthan gum
1 tsp cinnamon
1 tsp baking soda
1/2 tsp baking powder
1/2 tsp salt
1 3/4 cup sugar
1 cup vegetable oil
3 eggs
4 small apples (or fruit of choice)
1/2 cup chopped walnuts (or nut of choice)

Preheat oven to 350 degrees F. Grease a 9x13 pan and dust with gluten-free flour.

Whisk dry ingredients together, except sugar. Whisk oil, sugar and eggs together and add dry ingredients. Fold in apples and nuts.

Pour and press into pan. Bake about one hour until a knife inserted into the center comes out clean.

ITALIAN FRUIT CUP

FROM DUKKO'S

This is the best kind of spring and summer dessert: one that takes almost no effort, yet has great flavor and utilizes the fresh produce of the season to its full advantage. And this is such an Italian way to serve fruit — simple and elegant, yet with just a touch of decadence. Fresh blueberries and strawberries are perfect just as they are, so there's no reason to cook them. Just splash them with a fruity wine, add the herbaceous-ness of the basil and you're set. Or, take all of the fuss out of this dessert and let Cheri Esselstrom at Dukko's make it for you!

1 can of Mandarin oranges
(drain and reserve juice)
1 cup fresh blueberries
1 cup fresh strawberries
Several leaves of basil
1/2 cup white wine.
1/4 cup sugar

Combine the juice, the wine and the sugar in a pan and cook to a boil.

Set aside to cool. Mix fruit separately.

Chiffonade the basil and add all ingredients together. Chill and serve.
